How does this help education in the arts?

Net proceeds benefit the United Arts Council's art education programs

Research has indicated that including art and music instruction in a child's school day makes a big difference in students' overall academic performance.

According to Americans for the Arts, children who participate in the arts in school are:

4 times more likely to be recognized for academic achievements

4 times more likely to participate in math/science fairs

4 times more likely to win an award for writing

3 times more likely to be elected to class office

3 times more likely to go on to higher education
